

Good Changemaking Reads by...

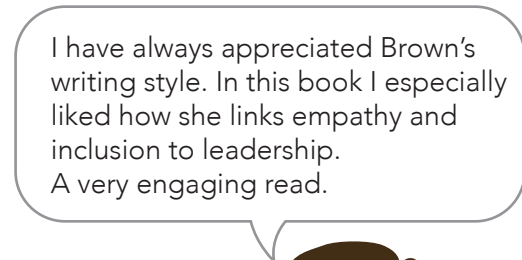

This "how-to" guide in problem-solving is a must-read for anyone seeking to transform social and environmental issues through innovative thinking.

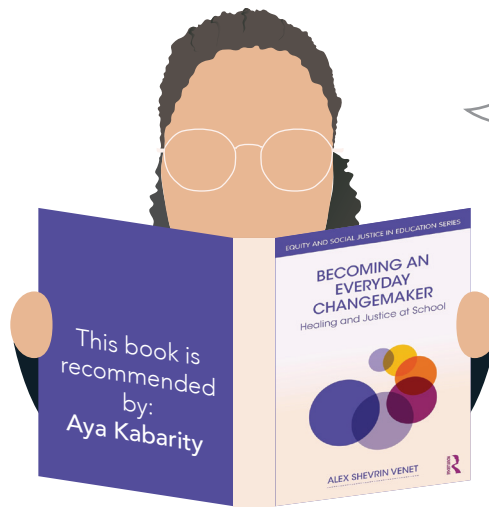

This book is recommended by:
Samantha Sullivan Sauer

"We all have the power to shape our responses to the changes and challenges we face." Our roles as educators mean we are changemakers with every new semester and every new student intake.

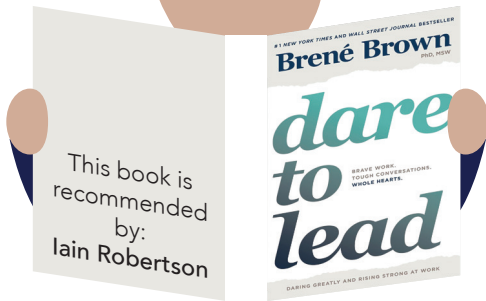

I have always appreciated Brown's writing style. In this book I especially liked how she links empathy and inclusion to leadership. A very engaging read.

This book is recommended by:
Aya Kabarity

This book demonstrates how educators can be powerful forces for justice and healing, turning everyday actions into steps toward lasting, inclusive change in our schools.

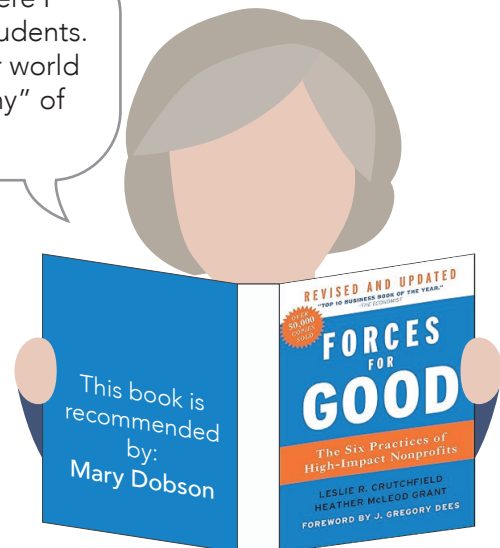

This book is recommended by:
Iain Robertson

Nonprofits are at the core of where I focus Changemaking with my students. Understanding more about their world helps me show students the "why" of what we are doing.

This book is recommended by:
Tracy Mitchell-Ashley

I love this open access resource because it paints a clear picture about why we need to change and shares how we can support students in growing their changemaking capacity. It is steeped in optimism: "Imagine if students at every higher education institution were equipped with purpose, agency, and skills to innovate for a better world, regardless of their chosen discipline, role, or sector" (p.9).

This book is recommended by:
Mary Dobson